Juzgar un delito es la fase final de un proceso que implica investigar y buscar pruebas. Administrar bien la justicia significa, pues, realizar correctamente la investigación del delito: definir si la acción es delictiva, determinar si su autor es responsable, buscar pruebas y hacer un análisis imparcial de las mismas. Las pruebas pueden ser relativamente objetivas y tener, por lo tanto, un menor margen de error: entre ellas podemos incluir las aportadas por la Medicina Forense, la Policía Científica y expertos científicos como arquitectos, ingenieros, físicos, etc. Sin embargo, no siempre existen estas pruebas objetivas, o son insuficientes, y hay que juzgar basándose en los testimonios de testigos que se fundamentan en la fragilidad de la percepción y memoria del ser humano, o en su propia conveniencia. Para analizar todo este proceso de la investigación del delito y contribuir a una mejor administración de la justicia y a un mejor entendimiento de la complejidad de la investigación de la acción delictiva, se reúnen en este libro las aportaciones de expertos en Derecho Penal, Medicina Forense, Policía Científica y Psicología Jurídica, dando como resultado una visión multidisciplinar fundamental, imprescindible y poco común en nuestro entorno.
