The U.S. Constitution, Bill of Rights, and a New Nation (The Story of the American Revolution) Steven Otfinoski

On October 19, 1781, British forces laid down their arms in Yorktown, Virginia. Despite the British surrender, the American struggle to form a new nation was far from finished. War debt, rebellions, slavery, and a weak central government warned of dire times ahead. Read more about what happened when the fighting ended and the real work began.
